3. In sum, the contract is aimed at defining the scope and needs of INTERNET. The first phase of the contract will ascertain the availability of transponder space, the technical and legal problems associated with procuring that space, specific satellite availability, and the procedures necessary for obtaining and maintaining a firm commitment for the identified space segment. The next phase in the contract--and the one which requires the additional funds which FBIS now wants to apply to the contract--involves definition and design of the desired system, on-site measurements, engineering costs, scheduling, and procurement documentation.
